The Aristotle Corporation Announces New Five Year, $45 Million Revolving Credit Facility

Stamford, CT, October 15, 2003 - The Aristotle Corporation (NASDAQ: ARTL; ARTLP) announced today that it has entered into a five year, $45 million credit agreement with Bank One, N.A., as Agent, and Johnson Bank - Wisconsin. The new credit agreement replaces Aristotle's existing debt facility that had a credit capacity of $31 million. In addition to seasonal working capital needs and letters of credit, the new credit arrangement will provide Aristotle with capital for appropriate acquisitions of businesses similar in nature to Aristotle's current business segments.

Pursuant to the new agreement, the lending banks will loan to Aristotle, from time to time, up to $45 million through a revolving line of credit. The credit facility, which is secured by substantial portions of Aristotle's assets, contains terms that provide more effective flexibility in management of working capital. Interest rates are comparable with those under Aristotle's prior credit arrangement, and adjust with changes in market rates.

Aristotle's President and Chief Operating Officer, Steven B. Lapin, commented, "The new credit facility provides your Company with a key financial tool for growth over the next five years, by supporting acquisitions targeted to add depth to our comprehensive product offerings, primarily in the education and health industries." Mr. Lapin added, "In addition, since the new credit facility requires no principal amortization for the next five years, your Company will be able to utilize better its seasonal cash flows, and the excess cash can be used for general corporate purposes. Under the previous credit arrangement, your Company was required to pay down $9.0 million over the past twelve months, and would have been required to make other principal payments at intervals throughout its remaining term."
